The Center for Public Interest Law (CPIL) serves as an advocate for the underrepresented in the state of California in state regulatory proceedings. The Center also serves as an academic center of research in administrative law and teaches direct clinic skills in public interest regulatory law.

CPIL's main office is on the campus of the University of San Diego, with additional offices in Sacramento and San Francisco. Its staff doggedly researches the performance of a number of public agencies across the state, such as the Coastal Commission, the Public Utilities Commission, the State Bar and the Board of Medical Quality Assurance.

CPIL's student interns and attorneys are often seen in the halls of our State Capitol, investigating and lobbying on behalf consumers and ratepayers. Most recently, the center commenced one of its most important projects: the Children's Advocacy Institute, which will look at the overall delivery of children's services by the State of California.
